

“I came to see you. We cannot talk over an open signal any longer. We need to talk.”

The rest of the group joined them in the hallway and they all had to take a minute to figure out what was going on.

In the living room, she sat down with Caleb and asked the rest of them to step outside while she spoke with him.

“We know that someone is trying to stop you, but we don’t know who and we don’t know why. Until we know, we have to stop contacting on unsecure channels, which is why I am here.”

“How did you know we would be here? We didn’t tell anyone where we were heading. How did you know we would be in this house?”

“The spy you spoke to in Nice was a cousin. She told me that you had contacted and were waiting for her. She gave me a quick update on what she would be telling you and then went to find you. So...Here I am, wanting to help in any way that I can.”

“Well, you need to get back to London, but not now.”

The team made plans to get into and out of the German base.

“Joshua and I are the language experts, so we will go in as officers. Eli and Abraham will go in as our driver and guard. Dorothy, while we are doing this, you will get back to London the same way you got here. It is much to dangerous for you to be here. Let’s get moving.”

As they started working to get everything in place for the mission, Caleb kept looking outside. Everyone was a potential spy.

“Heads up, guys!” Caleb barked.

The young girl on her bicycle pedaled past and they all relaxed once she was gone. “She’s a bit young to be a spy, Cap.” David was chuckling softly.

“Get back to work!”

They got into the stolen Mercedes command car to drive to the base and Caleb reminded Dorothy to be safe.
